

Enabling the continuation of Holocaust testimony

Charity helps schools inspire future generations through descendants of Holocaust survivors

UK charity helps 2nd and 3rd generation Holocaust survivors share their family stories with young people and teach empathy and understanding

In an effort to tackle racism and discrimination, UK based organisation Generation 2 Generation (G2G) is helping 2nd and 3rd generation survivors share their family stories to encourage empathy and understanding in future generations.

G2G supports its speakers to prepare and deliver their family's Holocaust experiences and to inspire tolerance and respect. Integrating oral and visual testimony with personal artefacts including photographs, film and letters, they offer engaging, historically accurate and age-appropriate presentations.

In the past year, five G2G speakers have spoken in 50 schools, religious and civic institutions to more than 3,500 young people and adults. One teacher described a talk presented in her school as a "superb presentation pitched at exactly the right level for students, combining the history with its impact on people".

Anita Peleg, Chair of the Board of Trustees at Generation 2 Generation says: "As intolerance in society reveals itself, remembering the Holocaust offers valuable learnings to encourage empathy and understanding."

"We believe that descendants of Holocaust survivors have an important role to ensure the experiences of their families who suffered racism and discrimination shouldn't be forgotten, integrating first hand survivor testimony to pass their stories onto future generations."

G2G is currently offering its services online, using Zoom to deliver presentations to schools, universities and civic institutions. In response to positive feedback and demand from schools and other institutions, G2G aims to offer at least 10 speakers by the end of 2020.

About Generation 2 Generation

Generation 2 Generation (G2G) provides thoroughly vetted, trained and well-rehearsed speakers for schools, universities, community and civic organisations and places of worship. These presentations have a strong educational emphasis which integrate oral and visual testimony with personal and historical artefacts.

Since founding in 2018, G2G's presenters have shared their stories in schools, libraries, community centres, libraries, civic organisations, churches and synagogues at events throughout the year. Enquiries can be booked online where a speaker placement officer will answer any questions you may have.
